
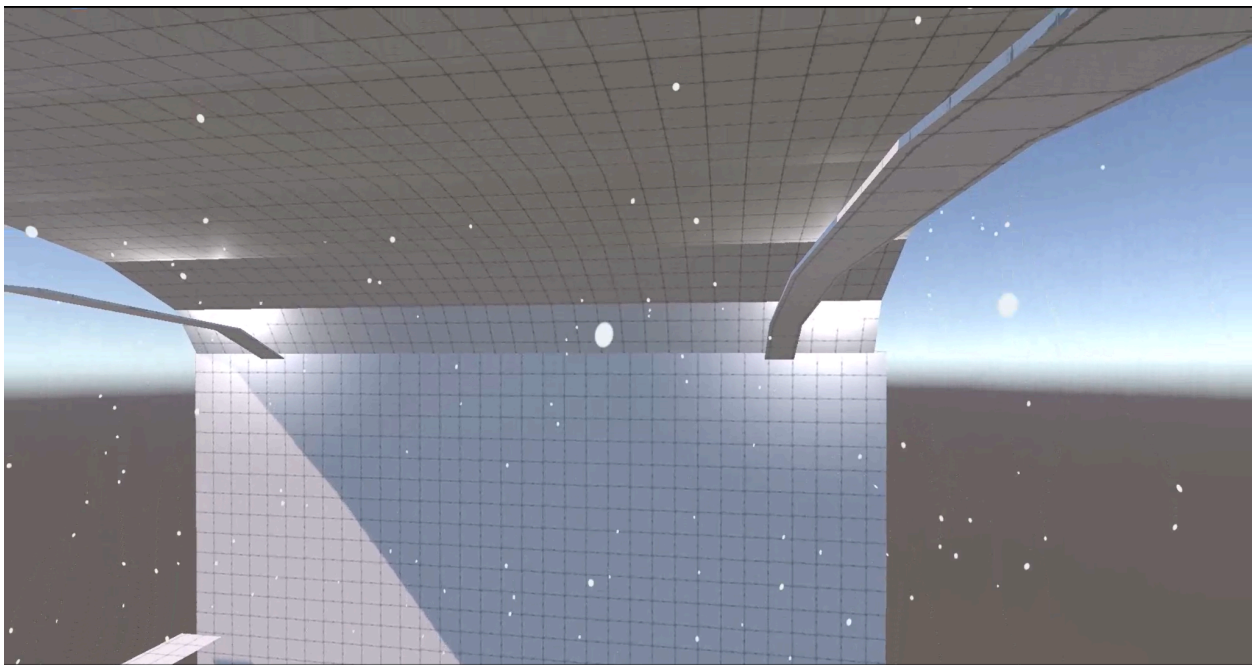
Early blockout of the warehouse area.



Originally the roof was completely covered with the exception of one hole in the ceiling, but it didn’t make logical sense for the building to be filled with so much snow despite having such a small opening to let snow in.

Additionally, it made designing the interior space a little easier as I could see everything from a top down view.

This predates the addition of post processing to the scene to help improve the visual aesthetic of the arena by using ACES tonemapping to get rid of the over exposed previous aesthetic.

Walls previously didn’t exist due to me planning to have a skybox of Gotham City, but due to scope constraints, this idea was cut, so walls had to be reintroduced in order to limit the default Unity aesthetic.
